It's pretty alright. I personally play it for the word typing mode, but there's a handful of other modes to play that range from the quality of "mindless fun" to "pointless frustration". It's visually stimulating and it has some decent tracks of music. It lights up all the parts of your brain that tell you that you're having fun and making progress, at least for a little while.

This game goes on sale pretty frequently, so buy it during a sale. It's not really worth five dollars, but for the price of a pack of gum ($0.50), it's pretty worth it for the "words" mode. Stay away if you're not a fan of the "flashing lights + basic reflex" style of games (like Osu!, ect.). So the thing is, this game is almost great. However, every single one of the game modes has some annoying part to it that just makes the game unfun. The cube has horrific camera angle transitions, the words is super weird because it types out parts of some words as you type out the first one you see, and the arrows one is like Beatmania if the different columns meant literally nothing. This game would be good to practice speed on your number pad or to practice typing, but as a rhythm game, it fails in my opinion. Just play osu! or Beatmania instead.. One thing I'll say, If you notice, I've only got about 20-30 minutes in this game so far. That's as much as I can take. Playing the first level, the one which is available when you first get the game, the one you have to play 3-4 times in order to purchase even another song to play causes visual distortions after looking away from the screen where the walls in my room bulge and shift.

This game makes me incredibly dizzy and it will probably do the same to you.
